Proof of Work vs Proof of Stake

proof of work is a requirement to define an expensive computer calculation, also called mining

Proof of stake, the creator of a new block is chosen in a deterministic way, depending on its wealth, also defined as stake.

A reward is given to the first miner who solves each blocks problem.

The PoS system there is no block reward, so, the miners take the transaction fees.

Network miners compete to be the first to find a solution for the mathematical problem

The screenshot shows the OpenNIC website. At the top left is the 'nic' logo inside an oval. To the right is a search bar with the placeholder 'search here ...' and a 'Go' button. Below the logo is a dark navigation bar with links: Home, Resources, Contact us, and TLDs. The main content area features a large, bold, dark grey text block asking: 'Are you looking for an alternative DNS provider that is open and democratic, are you concerned about censorship?'. Below this text is a smaller, lighter grey text: 'Want to change? Click the big blue button!'. A large, rounded rectangular button with a blue gradient background and white text says 'Get Started Now!'. Underneath the button, there is a block of text listing IP addresses and their corresponding DNS names and uptime percentages: 'Give me the numbers, I know what I'm doing!', '178.79.174.162 (ns1.eng.gb) -- 98.94% uptime', '192.71.249.249 (ns1.vwv.be) -- 99.24% uptime', '92.222.80.28 (ns1.sbg.fr) -- 99.61% uptime', and '151.236.29.92 (ns1.nh.nl) -- 99.25% uptime'. At the bottom of the page, there is a footer message: 'Find us on Freenode at #opennic – You can use our webchat to get there quickly!'

My Announcement March 15 2017

 ned ▾ @65 in steemit 2 months ago

Yesterday Dan Larimer resigned as CTO of Steemit. Steemit will go on, but I'll be honest... today has been a stressful day. Dan has an unusual history, so while we can't say we expected this, it was a possibility we had planned for.

The truth is, Jeffrey Paul (@sneak) has been the driving force behind development for the past 3 months. While this whole affair is emotionally painful, development is actually ahead of schedule thanks to Jeffrey and of course our amazing team of developers. He's the right person to head development in the interim as we transition into the future.

I won't lie; there are big changes coming. After processing these events, I believe this is the best thing for Steemit Inc, and most importantly for the community growing here on Steemit.com.

Good luck @ned!
I'm rooting for you and the dev team to succeed, even if my posts don't always express that.
Let me know if you're ever in need of some steemit propaganda comics for marketing ;)

well people put their life on the line for what they believe in. Sure it's a bad business policy, but I thought this was about bringing change not profits.

Resource based economy.

As network data is retrieved from a computer, the network pays safecoin to the user. This payment doesn't take place every time data is retrieved, instead it is more like a lottery, where the Farmer is rewarded at random. The safecoin is automatically paid by the network into the user's safecoin wallet address that is tied (cryptographically) to their vault. The amount of safecoin a user can earn is directly linked to how much resource they provide to the network and how often their computer is available to the network (turned on).

Farming: an incentive for a crowd sourced Internet.

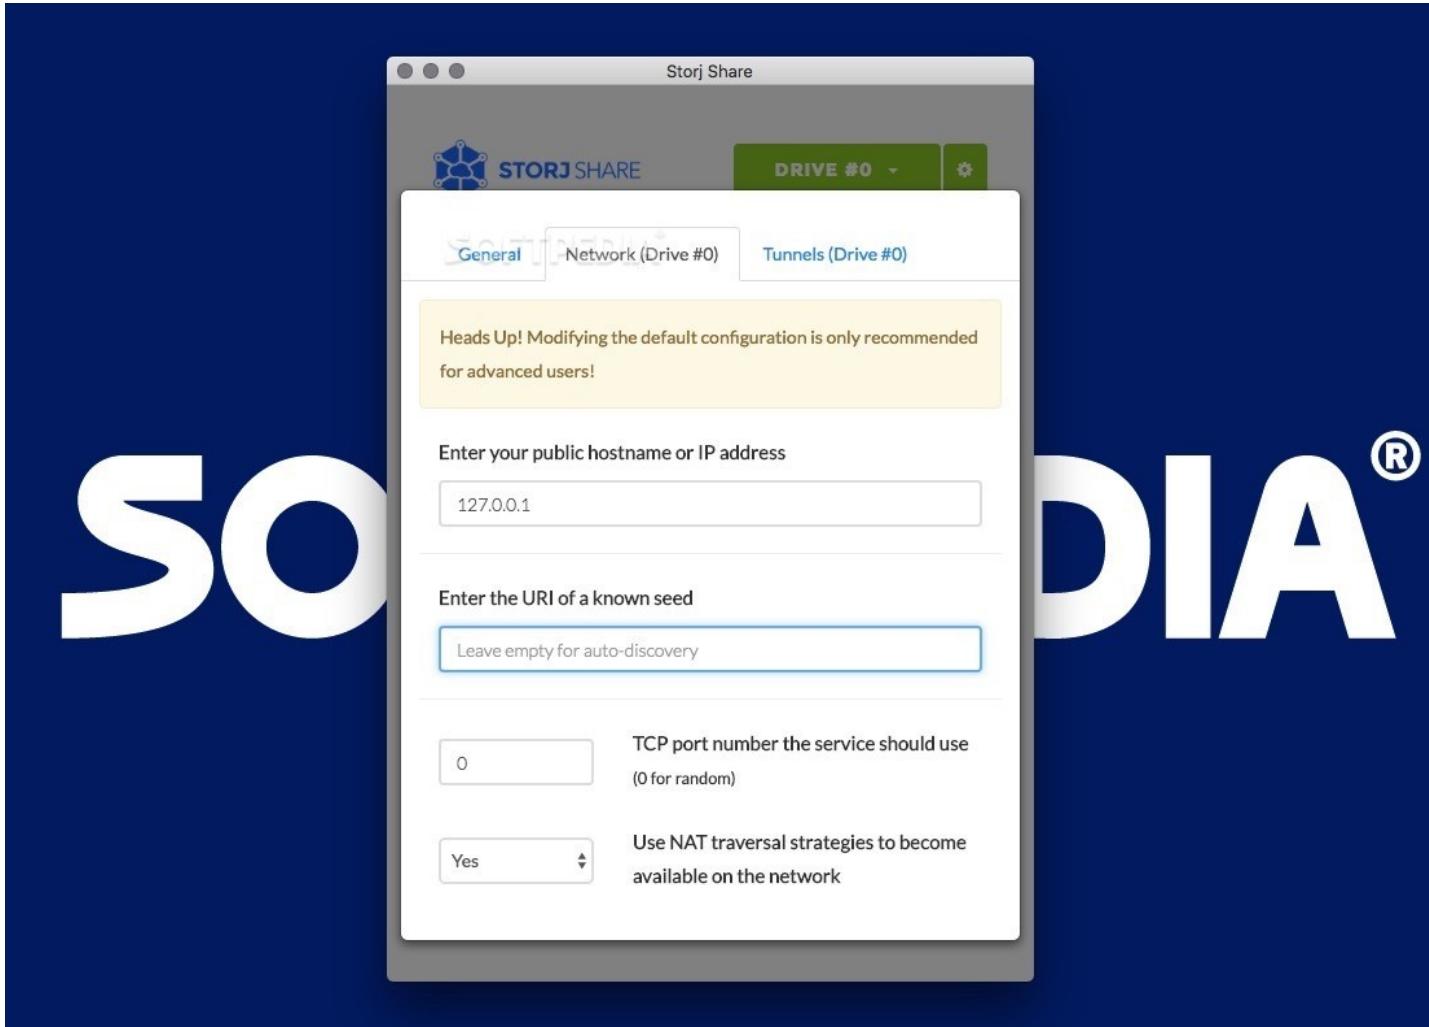

Safecoins are given as an incentive to users for providing their resource to the network. This resource is their: storage space, CPU, bandwidth and online time that enable the encrypted chunks of network data to be stored and retrieved from their computer. The process of providing resource and receiving safecoin in return is called 'Farming'. Each piece of encrypted network data is stored in a Farmer's 'Vault', a data storage and management location on the Farmer's computer which they cannot read, or access. The SAFE network is designed to self-manage these resources.

Proof of resource.

The resource provided by each Farmer is continually checked by the

Siacoin

The screenshot shows a web browser displaying the Sia website at <https://sia.tech>. The page features a header with the Sia logo and navigation links. Below the header, there's a section titled "Built on blockchain" with a descriptive paragraph about how Sia creates a decentralized storage marketplace. To the right of this text is a circular graphic illustrating a network of nodes connected by lines, with a central node highlighted in green. Below this section is a large call-to-action button labeled "Calculate your savings". On the left side of the button, there's a input field for "How many TB?" containing the number "5". To the right of the input field is a comparison table for four storage providers: Sia, Amazon S3, Google Cloud, and Microsoft Azure. The table includes columns for "Storage Provider", "Monthly Storage Cost", "Download Bandwidth Cost", "Private", "Decentralized", and "Included Multi Region Redundancy". The "Sia" row shows the lowest costs and highest values in all other categories. The "Amazon S3" row shows the highest costs and lowest values in other categories. The "Google Cloud" and "Microsoft Azure" rows fall in between.

Golem is a global, open sourced, decentralized supercomputer that anyone can access. It's made up of the combined power of user's machines, from personal laptops to entire datacenters.

Anyone will be able to use Golem to compute [almost] any program you can think of, from rendering to research to running websites, in a completely decentralized & inexpensive way.

The Golem Network is a decentralized sharing economy of computing power, where anyone can make money 'renting' out their computing power or developing & selling software.

The diagram shows a network of computer nodes connected by lines, forming a mesh-like structure. Each node is represented by a computer monitor and a vertical stack of rectangular boxes, likely representing hardware components like GPUs or SSDs. The connections between nodes are shown as thin lines, indicating the communication links that allow the network to function as a single, distributed supercomputer.

The Dashboard section displays the locked balance (78.9239845) and unlocked balance (2324.9239845). The Transfer section shows a "Quick transfer" form with fields for amount and a SEND button. The History section lists several transactions, each with a date, balance, and amount. The Address book section shows a list of contacts, one of which has an "Add to address book" button. The Mining section shows network status as "Connected". The Settings section includes a "Network status" indicator.
